

months. Over the coming markets.

There have been avoid breech strike. An importantly, manage

Hamilton Spectator

19-11-05

Sheep pain relief spray

Absolute Productions
Suite 5/62
Gray St Hamilton 3300
Mob 0428-302-344

AS the mulesing debate continues to rage, the world's first pain relief spray for sheep has been released.

Animal Ethics Managing Director, Alan Gifford, said the development of the product placed Australian agriculture at the forefront of animal welfare practices.

"One thing that sets this industry apart from all others is the resilience and determination of wool growers to battle through long odds."

"But at the end of the day, there is nothing more magnificent or genuine than wool growers and the produce. This new century is crying out for new commodities that are eco and animal friendly," he said.

Mr Gifford said the launch of spray, called Tri-Solfen, demonstrated to the world that the Australian farming community was once more leading the world in best farming practices.

VARDRY Merino Stud's Graeme Black, AVA President Dr Matt Makin, Technical director of Animal Ethics, Dr Meredith Sheil and Australian Sheep Veterinary Association representative and Willaura vet, Dr David Hucker, at the launch of Tri-solfen.

Mr Gifford said the amount of response he had received from Government, farming bodies, welfare groups and wool growers had been a true eye opener.

"There is a great future for Australian agriculture, when such a vibrant and energetic spirit still remains in our community," he said.